As far as I know most routers sold at your local retailer can do this, and most routers sold over the Internet will do this as well. Have a look in their documentation and forums. They should

What's New In CyE Router AP Switch Configurator Command Line Mode?

This is a tool that allows you to generate Cisco device commands on the fly for the most common Cisco device configurations: Routers, Access Points and Switches. Working with Cisco devices through command line is very difficult, because it implies to work using command-prompt and Telnet. The commands are typed one by one and in a window, which is not so great. Additionally there are many commands, each one for a different device. What is really great about this tool is that it is a 30 days trial, in other words you don't need to buy it, to have a look and to test it. Now about the tool, if you are following the introductions, then you know that it is a tool that helps you to paste the commands only one time and of course that is enough, because you get the configuration done. PenguiNet allows you to paste the commands only once and of course that is enough, because you get the configuration done. To use this tool you just have to download and install it. Having this tool, helps you a lot since this tool generates the commands and sends them to a Cisco device that is connected to the PC. There is also a calculator that will tell you the binary representation of an IP address or vice-versa. Additionally you can also calculate networks (subnet) and manage them with '/' [e.g.: /26, /30]. Router Configuration 　 Set the name of the router; 　 Assign IP address to the interfaces (serial, Ethernet, loopback); 　 Configure Routing Protocols; 　 Set up Access Control Lists (ACLs); 　 Configure static, default and dynamic routes; 　 Add other router commands. AP Configuration 　 Set the name of the Access Point; 　 Configure Interfaces; 　 Create SSIDs and VLANs; 　 Configure Authentication; 　 Configure Encryption; 　 Add other access point commands. Switch Configuration 　 Set the name of the switch; 　 Configure the Interfaces; 　 Create VLANs; 　 Set up VTP Domain; 　 Set up TRUNKing; 　 Add other switch commands. Calculator 　 Binary 2 Decimal; ◆
