My computer is crashing, and I am not sure if it is safe to leave it on because someone might possibly get into it and play with my valuable data. Is it possible for them to get into it? If they can get in, do they lose access to the data? A: "Safe" is in the eye of the beholder, but I'd say that if you are running in safe mode (if you're connected to the internet at least, that should keep the network open and allow you to take down the VHD and disconnect without losing anything) that someone who has access to the internet could certainly be a threat. In fact, even if someone is in the same building, they could still be a threat as well. If you have someone in your household who is a computer whiz, they could compromise your system in a heartbeat. Even if you have a great firewall, a lot of computers can be set up to bypass it. If you have a decent level of security, their only hope is to steal your credentials. But if they do that, your system is already compromised and they might as well just give away what they've done to the world. So in the end, the answer is: It depends. How much is it worth to you to protect your business information?

Have you identified who the perpetrator is? Can it be done anonymously? Good luck! Q: IF / ELSE IF: Append array keys to a new array I want to append the array key to a new array if they are a match in another array. If they match but the key is a different number I want to keep the existing key. $array1 = array("50","60","80"); $array2 = array("a","b","c"); $unique = array("20","30"); function addKeys(&$array1,&$array2,$unique) { foreach ($array1 as $key => &$val) { foreach ($array2 as $k => &$
