I tried following bash script, the result is not what I expected. `#!/bin/bash if [-f /tmp/foo.txt]; then echo "Hello World" cat /tmp/foo.txt rm /tmp/foo.txt else echo "The process can't be executed! Please start the process again!" exit -1 fi` What I want to do is simply to create a file /tmp/foo.txt if the file exists. However, I don't know why my script didn't work properly. A: Bash doesn't use word boundaries in the test command. The first `[` is interpreted as `[: -f`. Replace `if [-f /tmp/foo.txt]`; then with `if [-f /tmp/foo.txt] && [-f /tmp/bar.txt]` `[` is extended, its second operand doesn't need to be a glob pattern. `[-f /tmp/foo.txt]` checks whether `-f /tmp/foo.txt` exists, not whether `-f /tmp/foo.txt` is a regular file. `[-f /tmp/foo.txt]` behaves like `3da54e8ca3`
