What's New In?

The SearchMan application consists of a folder, the contents of which we can "reconstruct" in a different one. By placing many files inside the original folder, it becomes the first group. Other groups are obtained by selecting one from within the folders "reconstruction", which, as we have just observed, is equivalent to a directory. Each group of files is then represented by a folder of its own, just as there's only one file per group. Finally, we can use a search to look for a particular file inside one or more folders. To begin with, we have to specify the original folder and the criterion for searching. Although the SearchMan application does not have a fixed configuration, it has a few adjustable parameters that you can choose from: * File size. * Extension. * File names (maximum length). * Characters used to prefix filenames. * Searches are performed without comparisons; look and the find results are displayed immediately. * Three ways of adding, modifying or removing files: drag-and-drop, drag-and-drop files from Explorer window and drag-and-drop files on the icon. * Search with the built-in search function. * Create and use your own index files to search by subfile names. * Multi-threading, speed of the scan can be set as desired. * Detect changes in files and their properties. * Soft-error checking, the scan will be terminated when an unexpected file is found. * Log not only of the results but also the actual files. Features TheSearchMan: * Select multiple files. * One line to select the original directory. * Search by regular expressions. * Search within the files. * Print an index file or a search log. * Add files or existing subfolders. * Delete files or existing subfolders. * Start from an existing folder. * Hard list the items found. * Mark files as hidden and display files. * Open with Explorer. * Copy file path, location in Explorer, rename or move files. * Preview files. * Additional reports with statistics. * Search, create and remove search logs. * Search the files previously found to determine their access permissions. * Create and delete searches. * Create multiple indices. * An advanced configuration. * Fast and clean desktop. * Menus of categories are organized and listed.
