David Eckel (left) and Christian Caggiano, a pair of Greenville residents, fly a drone to photograph the scene at the T.J. Maxx store that burned to the ground Dec. 12, 2012. GREENVILLE, SC (WYFF) - Days before it was set aflame, there was a sign in the window of the T.J. Maxx at Providence Shopping Center saying that the store was soon closing. "That wasn't good," said pedestrian Joe Groves, who walked by, not knowing the sign was about to be a part of the history books. Groves was on his way to work for the first time that morning, when a fire broke out that he said he was too far away to see. "The time I got there, it was already gone. Nobody was around," he said. Meanwhile, two miles away from where Groves was walking, the flames were set off by thieves who took four separate dates in the break-in of the store. "I think it's a shame that somebody would set a fire and destroy the livelihood of a family," Greenville police Chief Ken Miller said, citing the loss of a furniture and appliances business that would not be able to open its doors for the first time.
