Nurses are a key component of the healthcare team responsible for individual patient assessment and assessment of risk. Lack of knowledge, poor communication and inappropriate risk assessment by nurses has been associated with poor outcomes in the general population, with cardiac patients in particular. The overall purpose of the study was to explore nurses' knowledge of and attitudes to cardiovascular risk in cardiac patients and to examine how nurses' knowledge might be related to their attitudes to risk assessment. Participants comprised a convenience sample of 54 registered nurses working in cardiac specialty areas in Australia and New Zealand. A quantitative survey of knowledge and attitudes to cardiovascular risk assessment was undertaken. Significant differences were found between nurses' level of knowledge and personal experience of dealing with cardiac risk. These included nurses' knowledge of factors that influence cardiovascular risk, causes of death and risk factors in the general population, attitudes to existing guidelines, attitudes to risk assessment in cardiac patients, and nurses' interpretation of risk assessment algorithms. We conclude that the cardiovascular risk knowledge base may be limited in the cardiac nursing profession. It is unclear whether this is a lack of training, or if cardiac nurses take insufficient interest in this area, or if they are unaware that their work is placing them at risk of coronary heart disease and stroke.[Effect of inducers of resistance on the content of iron and iron-binding proteins in the proteome of the human immunod
