What's new in Never Date Werewolves:

Wood Brothers Flying Colours is a Sam Bradman autobiography, which details his career in the Australian rules football league, including the gold medal winning Port Adelaide Football Club, as well the Wood Brothers Motor Company. Wood Brothers Flying Colours was written by Sam Bradman and published by Chesworth Publishing Ltd. in 2016. In this book Sam Bradman writes of his childhood days, growing up in Adelaide's West End and Hurstville, playing junior football, his decision to leave the West Lakes Football Club, which he had been with since 16. attending public school and wanting to be a firefighter, played football with his brother Frank at Port Adelaide Football Club, his selection for Port Adelaide, and the colourful Peter Moylan. History Wood Brothers Flying Colours was published by Chesworth Publishing in 2016. The book was written by Sam Bradman and published by Chesworth Publishing, with a foreword by past Wood Brothers' player Graham Cornes. The book is a real account of the life and footballing career of Sam Bradman, who was one of the last 'big names' of the Port Adelaide Football Club. He says, '20 years ago I was the last of the big names, let alone the last of the stars'. In this book Sam Bradman reveals that he was recruited as a 21-year-old footballer because he was always packing the rucks and this eventually led to him 'coming of age' in the position. At first, he had no idea that his ability to fill a ruck was highly desirable by the Port Adelaide Football Club, as he has no formal training in the area. His brother Frank, who had been a professional AFL footballer and grew up alongside Sam, helped him with things like tackling techniques, and also grabbed plenty of hits into the breeze. He says 'I definitely have more drive and desire to succeed than all the other players, and it has helped me get to where I am today'. Sam Bradman describes how when he was 21, he was taken to see the Chief Commissioner for Port

Adelaide, Tony Rundle, who was rated highly. He recalls that discussion but in details how he was told 'Don't come back again unless you can win a premiership. You are no good to me here'. Rundle had at the time, just lost his father, who was a great football player in a time where there were no scholarships or national drafts for the AFL. This was because of the talent available
