the three capes which encircle the Aeolian Islands, which is itself a chain off the eastern coast of Sicily. History The island of Capo d'Africa (Cape of Africa) was first sighted by the Greek explorer and geographer, Pytheas of Massilia, who was sailing around the southern coast of Italy in the 4th century BC and 1st century BC. A surviving description of Cape Florida taken from a work by Pytheas of Massilia, is given by Pliny the Elder in his Natural History (77): English translation I do not know whether the island now called [Sicily] was at that time, and is now, adjoined to some other by this cape, in which I
